Iran Holds Presidential Vote Amid Talks on Nuclear Deal

Rate-Hike Worries Send Dow To Worst Week Since October

By PAUL VIGNA
AND CAITLIN OSTROFF

U.S. stocks retreated Friday to send the Dow Jones Industrial Average to its worst week in nearly eight months, as traders warily eyed the Federal Reserve for hints of where monetary policy is headed.

Policy makers had signaled Wednesday that they expect to raise interest rates by late 2023, sooner than they had previously anticipated. Sentiment waned again on Friday after Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis president James Bullard said on CNBC that he expects the first rate increase even sooner, in late 2022.

The Fed has faced more inflation than it expected, and policy makers need to be nimble, he added. But it will take several Fed meetings to organize the debate over tapering its bond-purchase program, he said.

The Dow industrials fell 1.6% Friday, or 533.37 points, to 33,290.08. For the week, the blue-chip index lost 3.45%, its worst since the week ended Oct. 30.

The S&P 500 declined 1.3%, or 55.41 points, to 4,166.45 on Friday, losing 1.9% on the week. That broke a three-week streak of gains. The Nasdaq Composite lost 0.9%, or 130.97 points, to 14,030.38, as large technology stocks also fell. For the week, it was down 0.3%.

U.S. Speeds Military Withdrawal In Mideast

WASHINGTON—The Biden administration is sharply reducing the number of U.S. antimissile systems in the Middle East in a major realignment of its military footprint there as it focuses the armed services on challenges from China and Russia, administration officials said.

By Gordon Lubold,
Nancy A. Youssef
and Michael R. Gordon

The Pentagon is pulling approximately eight Patriot antimissile batteries from countries including Iraq, Kuwait, Jordan and Saudi Arabia, according to officials. Another antimissile system known as a Terminal High Altitude Area Defense, or Thaad, system is being withdrawn from Saudi Arabia, and jet fighter squadrons assigned to the region are being reduced, those officials said.

The accelerated withdrawals reflect several recent changes on the ground in the Middle East as well as Washington's own strategic imperatives under the Biden administration. At Olympic Swim Trials, First Battle Is the Warm-Up Pool

World's fastest swimmers can collide in jammed lanes; 'kicked in the side'

OMAHA, Neb.—Last month, Mariah Denigan graduated from high school in Kentucky. This week she's here competing in the U.S. Olympic Swim Trials against swimmers she has idolized most of her life for a spot on Team USA. But no one gets a chance at their Olympic dreams if they don't survive the warm-up pool first.

The warm-up pool is the place where hundreds of swimmers frantically swim over, through and on top of each other, all at once, to prepare for their races. There are no rules or

Behind Families' Decisions To Split Up at the U.S. Border

north. The parents worried the trip might be too hard on their two daughters, ages 5 and 2. That left Jordi, their rambunctious 4-year-old, always begging to go out fishing with his dad.

The plan was set: Jordi and his father would travel 1,500 miles to the U.S. border by foot, car, bus and truck, drawn by the promise of work in South Carolina. Then they would illegally cross the border, turn themselves over to border patrol and request asylum to stay in the U.S. The rest would stay behind.

"We had never thought that to dream of living a better life we would have to do something like this," said Ms. Zelaya, 22.

SoftBank's Son and Credit Suisse End Ties

By MARGOT PATRICK
AND PHILIP DVORAK

Credit Suisse Group AG and SoftBank Group Corp. Chief Executive Masayoshi Son recently dissolved a longstanding personal lending relationship and the bank clamped down on transactions with his company, according to regulatory filings and people familiar with the matter.

The moves came after the collapse of SoftBank-backed Greensill Capital in March plunged Credit Suisse into turmoil. It also follows Credit Suisse's $5.5 billion loss stemming from trading by family office Archegos Capital Management. The bank has since promised to dial down risk.

Mr. Son had long used Credit Suisse and other banks to borrow money against the value of his substantial holdings in SoftBank. As recently as February, Mr. Son had around $3 billion of his shares in the company pledged as collateral with Credit Suisse, one of the biggest amounts of any

EU loses fight over AZ jab deliveries

◆ Court battle over shortfall ◆ 'Serious breach' of contract ◆ Demand to speed supply denied

HANNAH KUCHLER — LONDON
MICHAEL PEEL — BRUSSELS

The EU has lost a legal bid to force AstraZeneca to speed up delivery of Covid-19 vaccines or risk billions of euros in fines, in the latest round of a bitter battle between the bloc and the British-Swedish pharmaceuticals company.

In a ruling yesterday, a court in Brussels criticised AstraZeneca for a "serious breach" of its contract with the EU after repeated shortfalls. But the court did not agree with the European Commission's demands for AstraZeneca to deliver 120m doses by the end of June or pay fines of €10 per dose per day.

The dispute between the commission and AstraZeneca has severely damaged the company's standing on the continent and in February spiralled into a diplomatic row.

The Brussels court ruled that AstraZeneca should provide 80m doses by the end of September. However, AstraZeneca has already delivered 70m doses and plans to provide the remaining 10m this month. The commission insisted that the court judgment would nonetheless put pressure on AstraZeneca as it "laid the tracks for the delivery of future doses on the basis of clear contractual principles".

The ruling found that the drug company's failure to send the EU vaccines manufactured in the UK was inconsistent with making the "best reasonable efforts" on supply required by its contract. But it did not order AstraZeneca to use the plant to fulfil the EU order.

A UK plant operated by Oxford BioMedica plant is nonetheless expected to start manufacturing for the EU, according to a person familiar with the matter.

AstraZeneca was originally expected to supply up to 300m doses to the EU in the first six months of this year but that forecast was cut sharply after production problems. With the pace of the EU's vaccine rollout accelerating, using mainly BioNTech/Pfizer and Moderna jabs — and some countries imposing

Some countries in the EU have restricted the AZ jab because of blood clot fears, cutting demand restrictions on the Oxford/AstraZeneca vaccine after the discovery of rare blood clots — there is less practical need for the doses.

Jeffrey Pott, AstraZeneca's general counsel, said: "AstraZeneca has fully complied with its agreement with the European Commission and we will continue to focus on the urgent task of supplying an effective vaccine."

Ursula von der Leyen, president of the commission, said: "This decision confirms the position of the commission: AstraZeneca did not live up to the commitments it made in the contract. It is good to see that an independent judge confirms this."

Games plan

Suga eyes gold at ballot box

A protester outside the Tokyo building housing the 2020 Olympics organising committee yesterday said staging the games without spectators was "desirable". Shigeru Omi said strict attendance caps should be enforced if they were allowed.

Prime minister Yoshihide Suga must now respond to the recommendations. But he will be buoyed by the latest NHK poll, which shows opposition to the games among Japanese has fallen to 31 per cent, from 80 per cent in May. Suga is betting that a good Olympics can deliver success in an election that must be called by October 22.

Fed rates rethink blows hole in 'reflation trades'

The Federal Reserve's recalculation of when it might need to start raising interest rates has sparked a markets shake-up. Commodities tumbled while long-dated Treasuries rose as officials brought forward forecasts for when action might be needed. The result was a battering for 'reflation trades' — bets on securities that might gain from inflation — as doubts emerged on how much pressure the Fed will tolerate.

Rich nations' failure to cough up cash threatens to derail UN climate summit

LESLIE HOOK — LONDON

Tensions over climate finance have threatened to derail the COP26 summit in November after weeks of UN deliberations stumbled over how to proceed with core principles of the Paris climate accord.

The downbeat conclusion fuels further disappointment about progress on halting global warming, after last week's G7 summit in Cornwall failed to produce specific plans for new climate funding.

Rich countries appear to have missed a target of providing $100bn in annual climate aid by 2020, creating mistrust among the 192 countries that signed the Paris agreement. The shortfall sets the scene for difficult discussions at the COP26 in Glasgow when it comes to agreeing new goals for climate finance.

"It is unlikely that rich countries hit the target of mobilising $100bn per year by 2020," said Amar Bhattacharya, co-chair of the UN's Independent Expert Group on Climate Finance and Senior Fellow at the Brookings Institution, although official figures are yet to be tabled formally.

At a time when government coffers have been emptied by the pandemic, reaching agreement on climate finance — public and private funding to help developing countries cut emissions and adapt to climate change — is more contentious than ever.

During three weeks of negotiations at the UN climate change inter-sessional meetings, which ended on Thursday, an undercurrent of discontent over climate finance stymied talks on topics such as carbon markets and transparency.

"The issue of climate finance still remains the most difficult part of all these negotiations," said Molwyn Joseph, environment minister for Antigua. "I do not believe that particular aspect was dealt with as it should have been."

Rich countries donated about $80bn in 2018, according to UN figures.

Several aspects of the "rule book" governing the 2015 Paris climate accord are due to be finalised at the COP26, including how countries report carbon emissions. Negotiators will also try to craft rules for global carbon markets, such as carbon offsets between nations.

Patricia Espinosa, UN climate chief, admitted there had been a lack of progress. "I cannot say that there was really any breakthrough in the consultations that took place here," she said.

The promised $100bn was "absolutely crucial" for the success of the talks, she added.

D.A. on the Left In Los Angeles Faces a Revolt

By TIM ARANGO

LOS ANGELES — From inside the walls of Folsom State Prison, the two inmates, one a convicted murderer, clinked their cups of prison moonshine in a toast to the new district attorney of Los Angeles, George Gascon.

A video of the celebration was released earlier this year by Mr. Gascon's opponents — and there are many — who used it to attack what is perhaps the most far-reaching plank of his progressive agenda: the review of nearly 20,000 old prison sentences, many for violent crimes like murder, for possible early releases.

Mr. Gascon, a Democrat, has brushed off the video as nothing more than a Willie Horton-style attack by get-tough-on-crime proponents that "plays well on Fox News." But he doesn't shy away from his belief that even those convicted of violent crimes deserve a chance at redemption.

"There's no way we can get to meaningful prison reduction in this country without looking at more serious crimes," Mr. Gascon, who also supports ending cash bail and eliminating the prosecution of juveniles as adults, said in an interview. "The public stories you hear are the really scary stuff. You're talking about the violent sexual predator. You're talking about some sadistic murderer. The reality is those are really a small number of the prison population and violent crime."

But the prospect of convicted murderers getting out early, or getting lighter sentences than they would have received in a previous era, has fueled an effort to force a recall election next year and remove Mr. Gascon from office. More than a thousand volunteers, as well as dozens of paid workers, are collecting signatures for the recall at gun stores, bail bonds offices, and even outside Mr. Gascon's home.

And inside courtrooms, some prosecutors who believe Mr. Gascon's policies will harm public safety are openly working against him by attempting to sabotage his

G.O.P. Expands Power in Remade Voting Boards

By NICK CORASANTINI

LaGRANGE, Ga. — Lonnie Hollis has been a member of the Troup County election board in West Georgia since 2013. A Democrat and one of two Black women on the board, she has advocated Sunday voting, helped voters on Election Days and pushed for a new precinct location at a Black church in a nearby town.

But this year, Ms. Hollis will be removed from the board, the result of a local election law signed by Gov. Brian Kemp, a Republican. Previously, election board members were selected by both political parties, county commissioners and the three biggest municipalities in Troup County. Now, the G.O.P.-controlled county commission has the sole authority to restructure the board and appoint all the new members.

"I speak out and I know the laws," Ms. Hollis said in an interview. "The bottom line is they don't like people that have some type of intelligence and know what they're doing, because they know they can't influence them."

Ms. Hollis is not alone. Across Georgia, members of at least 10 county election boards have been removed, had their position eliminated or are likely to be kicked off through local ordinances or new laws passed by the state legislature. At least five are people of color and most are Democrats — though some are Republicans — and they will most likely all be replaced by Republicans.

Iran Election Could Speed Nuclear Deal

Hard-Liner May Be
Biden's Best Chance

By DAVID E. SANGER
and FARNAZ FASSIHI

WASHINGTON — Iran's announcement on Saturday that an ultraconservative former head of the judiciary, Ebrahim Raisi, has been elected president now touches off an unpredictable diplomatic drama: The ascension of a hard-line government in Iran may actually present the Biden administration with a brief opportunity to restore the 2015 nuclear deal with the country.

President Biden's top aides, who have been negotiating with Iranian officials behind closed doors in Vienna — passing messages from hotel rooms through European intermediaries because the Iranians will not meet them directly — believe the moment may have come. And, they say, the next six weeks before Mr. Raisi is inaugurated present a unique window to strike a final deal with Iran's leadership on a painful decision it has been delaying.

Officials in both Washington and Tehran contend that Iran's supreme leader, Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, wants to restore a nuclear agreement with the West — which President Donald J. Trump ripped up more than three years ago — in order to lift the crushing sanctions that have kept Iranian oil largely off the market.

In fact, the detailed wording of the resurrected agreement was worked out weeks ago in Vienna, the same city where the original accord was finalized six summers ago, senior officials say. Since then, the resurrected

CLASH OF VISIONS AS NEW YORKERS VOTE FOR MAYOR

FINAL DAYS OF PRIMARY

As City Recovers, Equity,

Divide Candidates

By KATIE GLUECK

The New York City mayor's race began in the throes of a pandemic, in a shattered city convulsed by a public health catastrophe, economic devastation and widespread protests over police brutality.

Now, with voters heading to the primary polls on Tuesday, New York finds itself in a very different place. As the city roars back to life, its residents are at once buoyed by optimism around reopenings, but also anxious about public safety, affordable housing, jobs — and the very character of the nation's largest city.

The primary election marks the end of an extraordinary chapter in New York's history and the start of another, an inflection point that will play a defining role in shaping the post-pandemic future of the city. The leading mayoral candidates have promoted starkly divergent visions for confronting a series of overlapping crises, making this primary, which will almost certainly determine the next mayor, the most significant city election in a generation.

Public polling and interviews with elected officials, voters and party strategists suggest that on the cusp of Tuesday's election, Eric Adams, the Brooklyn bor-

The federal agents who raided a drug dealer's house in a suburb of Philadelphia found marijuana and, to their surprise, $2.5 million in cash stashed in a secret compartment beneath a fish tank.

But they were even more surprised to discover so much art — 14 paintings on the walls and another 33 stacked in a storage unit a few miles away from the home of the dealer, Ronald Belciano. The artists included Renoir, Picasso and Salvador Dalí.

"That jumped out at us," said Brian A. Michael, special agent in charge for Homeland Security Investigations Philadelphia. "That amount of artwork was not something you come across in every investigation."

It turned out, Mr. Belciano used the art to launder some of his drug

In 2015, he was sentenced to more than five years in prison for dealing drugs and for laundering the illicit proceeds by taking advantage of one of the art market's signature features — its opacity.

Billions of dollars of art changes hands every year with little or no public scrutiny. Buyers typically have no idea where the work they are purchasing is coming from. Sellers are similarly in the dark about where a work is going. And none of the purchasing requires the filing of paperwork that would allow regulators to easily track art sales or profits, a distinct difference from the way the government can review the transfer of other substantial assets, like stocks or real estate.

But now authorities who fear

AN AFGHAN soldier surveys the terrain from a UH-60 Black Hawk during a resupply flight to troops in Shah Wali Kot. Taliban advances in the area mean all logistical support to outposts must be done by air.

Afghanistan's air force in a downward spiral

The viability of the rare U.S.-backed success story is in question as the Americans pull out

By NABIH BULOS

SHAH WALI KOT, Afghanistan — The UH-60 Black Hawk plummeted like a roller coaster from 10,000 feet — safe from whatever the Taliban was firing at it — all the way down to 50 feet, its nose almost licking the sun-scorched terrain of Shah Wali Kot.

Blitzing at 115 mph, the helicopter swooped just beyond the battle barriers of an Afghan army base, its two onboard gunners arcing their M240 machine guns as they scanned for any Taliban fighters nearby.

When the Black Hawk landed, five soldiers — two wounded, all terrified — were dragging a sleeping bag with their belongings down the hill through the desert underbrush. They were almost at the helicopter when the gunners let loose a burst of bullets toward a dull-brown knoll. The soldiers threw themselves onboard, one of them frantically pointing at an unseen enemy to the left and begging the crew to take off quickly.

The door closed. The pilot punched the throttle. The Black Hawk lunged forward, then knifed up into the afternoon sky to the drumroll of another M240 salvo.

Before takeoff hours earlier, Capt. Rezay Jamshid had explained — a wan smile through his thick beard — that he would descend fast “because of the situation.”

“But don’t worry,” he said, soothingly. Bravado? Not really. More a curt acknowledgment of what had become the lethal, daily reality confronting Jamshid and the rest of the Afghan pilots. The Taliban forces were resurgent. The Americans, along with NATO troops and their hardware — the F-16s, Reaper drones, C-130s and hundreds of other aircraft — were leaving. The Afghan air force, which the U.S. and its partners have nurtured to the

What will be new norm in L.A. traffic?

Transit officials and motorists wait to see if patterns altered by COVID offer clues to future of commuting.

By HAYLEY SMITH

As Los Angeles reopens after enduring more than a year of COVID-19 restrictions, those seemingly unbelievable ribbons of green on your phone’s freeway traffic app are rapidly returning to red.

Traffic and transit patterns were altered by the pandemic, and both transportation officials and drivers are anxiously waiting to see whether they offer clues to the future of commuting or simply represent temporary changes in L.A.’s inevitable slog toward gridlock.

Though congestion is rapidly approaching pre-pandemic levels, traffic flows have changed, according to data reviewed by The Times.

The findings are fairly consistent among L.A.’s major arteries. The afternoon commute has bounced back faster than the morning trek, which remains a bit more free-flowing in many areas.

Both morning and evening rush hours are shorter than they used to be, with

Low vaccine rates for first responders raise a troubling question

When COVID-19 vaccines became available in California, police officers, firefighters and other first responders got priority access, and potentially more.

There were Airbnb gift cards, bicycles and cameras. Cash prizes in raffles ranged from $20 to $1,000. Some prison healthcare workers were made eligible for cash prizes just for sitting through a 30-minute “Vaccination Education” training session.

But despite the priority access and array of incentives, vaccination rates for police, fire and corrections agencies across Los Angeles and California have lagged well behind the state’s average for adult residents, according to a survey of agencies conducted by The Times.

bered Betsy, who noticed, too, the shine that had returned to Brennan’s green eyes.

“He didn’t want to leave,” she said. “He stayed and stayed until Terry had to drive him back.”

Terry, his father, and Betsy would be heading to Mexico in the morning for a wedding. They’d be back on Sunday — Mother’s Day — but Betsy already was holding her gift.

“I hope you have an awesome Mother’s Day weekend,” Brennan had written in the card. [See Brennan, A10]

Massacre by Taliban heightens foreboding

Slain commando chief was seen by Afghans as best hope as U.S. departs

BY PAMELA CONSTABLE

KABUL — He was a general's son, a U.S.-trained officer with a dazzling academic record and a daring military reputation.

Col. Sohrab Azimi, a field commander in Afghan special forces that often rescue troops and retake outposts from Taliban attacks, symbolized the country's best hope to fend off an insurgent takeover as U.S. troops began to withdraw from the fight.

Azimi, 31, and his squad of 22 men were massacred Wednesday by Taliban forces while defending a base in northern Faryab province and waiting for reinforcements.

The loss unleashed a flood of emotions across social media — grief, anger and fear that even the nation's most skilled defenders would be undercut by poor military leadership and the departure of Afghanistan's major military ally.

At a ceremony outside a military hospital in Kabul on Saturday morning, a Muslim cleric blessed the velvet-draped coffins of Azimi and two other commandos, released by the Taliban after negotiations with the International Committee of the Red Cross. They were lifted onto artillery trucks, followed by goose-stepping soldiers and a marching band, then loaded into ambulances.

"This is the price we pay for defending our country's independence, freedom and dignity," Ramin Dadfar Spanta, a former foreign minister, told the silent, SEE AFGHANISTAN ON A26

Historic water shortages spell peril for farmers, regulators and politicians alike

The new West: Scorched dry

BY SCOTT WILSON AND SARAH KAPLAN

LAKE OROVILLE, CALIF. — The work had to be done quickly as water vanished to vapor in the early summer heat. Hauling giant houseboats, some 50 to 60 feet long, from this lake became urgent just a few weeks ago.

In all, the Oroville Lake Marinas company removed 130 houseboats; floating recreation palaces such as the Monte-Carol and La Bella Vita now sit in a parking lot on stacks of pasteboard props. The lot stands where the lake's high water mark would usually be — 900 feet. The lake is now at 700 feet and falling fast.

The man-made lake, which helps to irrigate thousands of acres of crops through the elaborate State Water Project, is now so low that it is impossible for the marina to remove more of the large boats even as dun-colored islands begin to pop up. The launch ramp no longer reaches the water, which will keep disappearing amid a summer of record heat, including the "mega-heat wave" scorching much of the West.

"I've seen it like this before but only at the end of summer, never this early," said Aaron Wright, the area's public safety chief who has worked in and around Lake Oroville — the state's second-largest reservoir — for the last eight years. "This low will be historic."

How false 'Italygate' claims made their way to the top

Va. executive's firms pushed election-fraud conspiracy theory

BY JON SWAINE AND EMMA BROWN

Late last December, as President Donald Trump pressed senior officials to find proof of election fraud, White House Chief of Staff Mark Meadows emailed acting attorney general Jeffrey Rosen a letter detailing an outlandish theory of how an Italian defense contractor had conspired with U.S. intelligence to rig the 2020 presidential contest.

The letter, which was among records released by Congress this past week, was printed under the letterhead of USAerospace Partners, a little-known Virginia aviation company. In early January, a second Virginia firm, the Institute for Good Governance, and a partner organization released a statement from an Italian attorney who claimed that a hacker had admitted involvement in the supposed conspiracy.

According to the conspiracy theory known as "Italygate," people working for the Italian defense contractor, in coordination with senior CIA officials, used military satellites to switch votes from Trump to Joe Biden and swing the result of the election.

Though her name was not mentioned in either document, both Virginia organizations are led by Michele Roosevelt Edwards, according to state corporate filings reviewed by The Washington Post. Edwards is a former Republican congressional candidate who built a reputation as an advocate for the Somali people and as someone who could negotiate with warlords and pirates in the war-torn region.

Brain surgery helped him stay sober 600 days

Gerod Buckhalter's success shows what may be possible with experimental treatment

BY LENNY BERNSTEIN

MICHAEL S. WILLIAMSON/THE WASHINGTON POST

Gerod Buckhalter gazes at part of a large mural depicting brain circuitry at the Rockefeller Neuroscience Institute, where he underwent surgery to install a deep brain stimulator.

MORGANTOWN, W.VA. — After nearly two decades of hardcore drug addiction — after overdoses and rehabs and relapses, homelessness and dead friends and ruined lives — Gerod Buckhalter had one choice left, and he knew it.

He could go on the same way and die young in someone's home or a parking lot, another casualty in a drug epidemic that has claimed nearly 850,000 people like him. Or he could let a surgeon cut two nickel-size holes in his skull and plunge metal-tipped electrodes into his brain.

More than 600 days after he underwent the experimental surgery, Buckhalter has not touched drugs again — an outcome so outlandishly successful that neither he nor his doctors dared hope it could happen. He is the only person in the United States to ever have substance use disorder relieved by deep brain stimulation. The procedure has reversed Parkinson's disease, epilepsy and a few other intractable conditions but had never been attempted for drug addiction here.

A partir de esta semana el Gobierno entró de lleno en el doble modo gestión-campaña. En las primeras evaluaciones que se hicieron de las encuestas que consulta el oficialismo surgió un dato preocupante: un marcado retroceso en dos segmentos históricos del kirchnerismo: la clase media baja y los jóvenes.

Tanto los segmentos socioeconómicos C2 y C3 como quienes tienen entre 16 y 29 años exhiben fuertes niveles de descontento con el Gobierno. Muchos votaron al Frente de Todos en 2019, pero hoy engrosan la tropa de los "desencantados".

"Tenemos un problema con los sectores de trabajadores informales, autónomos y monotributistas, que se sintieron desprotegidos en la pandemia", dijo a LA NACION un funcionario que lee las encuestas que circulan por Balcárces 50. Una encuesta de

Analogías que llegó a la Casa Rosada ofrece un dato contundente: ante la consulta sobre si el Gobierno tiene acciones para acompañar a los jóvenes en materia laboral y educativa, el 73,5% de las personas entre 16 y 29 años respondió "poco o nada". 500 MIL MORTOS PELA COVID

★ PAÍS VACINOU 15% DA POPULAÇÃO ADULTA ★ CASOS REGISTRADOS SE APROXIMAM DE 18 MILHÕES

Quase 16 meses após o registro do primeiro caso no país, o Brasil chegou neste sábado (19) à marca de meio milhão de mortos pela Covid, saldo absoluto até hoje só atingido pelos Estados Unidos, com população cerca de 50% maior, e acima de qualquer outra tragédia nacional. Com a campanha de vacinação ainda lenta — pouco mais de 15% dos adultos tomaram as duas doses necessárias de imunizante — e um governo que negligencia medidas de contenção, não é possível dizer quantos ainda irão morrer.

O desaparecimento de 500 mil brasileiros em um intervalo de menos de um ano e meio, por uma única causa, é algo sem precedentes. Para que tamanho saldo fosse atingido, foi necessário um encadeamento de erros que vai do presidente ao cidadão comum. Começa pela tentativa de minimizar a pandemia, passa pelo questionamento da eficácia da imunização e pelo atraso para adquirir as doses necessárias e culmina na aposta em remédios ineficazes e no descrédito de medidas simples, como uso de máscara.

A dose de fatalismo aplicada por Jair Bolsonaro (cuja gestão da crise é alvo de uma CPI), assim como por quem o apoia, traduz-se na ideia de que "todos nós vamos morrer um dia" e tem como legado grandes vazios: famílias despedaçadas, economia e renda abaladas, disparada de transtornos mentais, uma geração afastada da escola, negócios falidos. Transcorridos 16 meses a serem relatados em livros de história, os que combatem e os que desdenham a pandemia convergem em apenas um ponto: até quando? Saúde B1

Régionales : le grand test avant la présidentielle

Les Français sont appelés à voter ce dimanche, à moins d'un an du scrutin de 2022. Une élection locale aux enjeux nationaux, avec en toile de fond une possible performance du RN.

À dix mois de la présidentielle, les Français sont appelés à renouveler leurs conseils régionaux et départementaux. Un double scrutin local qui devrait être marqué par une abstention massive, mais qui revêt cependant des enjeux majeurs pour les différentes forces politiques. À droite, des présidents de région sortants y voient une rampe de lancement en vue de

2022. Le RN espère pour sa part conquérir une ou plusieurs régions pour asseoir sa dynamique. Face à Marine Le Pen, Les Républicains, les macronistes et la gauche vont devoir se positionner dès dimanche soir sur un éventuel front républicain.

ÉDITORIAL par Yves Thureau ythureau@lefigaro.fr

En attendant 2022

Bien sûr, après des mois d'assignation à résidence, de vie masquée, et à l'approche des vacances, les Français ont la tête ailleurs. Bien sûr, pour mille raisons - et la défiance à l'égard des responsables politiques en est une, majeure -, l'abstention s'annonçait massive. Bien sûr, entre ce qui est imposé ou contrôlé par l'Europe, depuis Bruxelles, ou l'État, depuis Paris, les pouvoirs exacts des régions sont loin d'être évidents pour tout le monde. Faudrait-il pour autant négliger les résultats des scrutins des deux dimanches à venir ? Sans être une préfiguration de la présidentielle, ils donneront une indication à prendre au sérieux pour la suite. Avec, à la clé, une certitude : la poutre qui soutient l'édifice politique n'a pas fini de bouger.

Le Rassemblement national va-t-il, cette fois, réussir à gagner ? La probabilité existe dans plusieurs régions. Si tel était le cas, cela signifierait que beaucoup de tabous et de verrous ont sauté dans le pays. Et pas uniquement le fameux « barrage » du front républicain, qui semble de plus en plus lézardé. À l'horizon, toujours dans l'hypothèse du succès, la route de l'Élysée deviendrait moins sinueuse pour Marine Le Pen.

Si l'avenir de la gauche paraît durablement compromis, même quand elle tente ici ou là de s'unir, celui de la droite se joue aussi en partie en ce début d'été. Xavier Bertrand, Valérie Pécresse, Laurent Wauquiez ? La question n'est pas tellement de savoir s'ils ont triomphé, mais comment. Si l'un d'eux se dégage vraiment dans les urnes, son camp saura-t-il éviter une nouvelle guerre des Atrides ? Ce serait une bonne surprise pour la droite. En ces jours de suspense, un seul homme ne se fait guère d'illusions. Il est sans parti ni ancrage local. Autant par sa faute que par sa volonté. Emmanuel Macron, qui parcourt la province dans une espèce de vraie-fausse campagne, ne peut pas attendre grand-chose de ces régionales, sauf qu'elles lui désignent ses futurs adversaires. Alors, la course pour 2022 pourra commencer. ■
